Common wisdom aside, attention research is full of surprises. Focusing on upbeat emotions such as hope and kindness literally, not just figuratively, expands your world, just as dwelling on negative feelings shrinks it. Contrary to the messages from our wired, workaholic culture, multitasking is a myth.

Just thinking about paying attention affects your brain, revving it up for the actual experience. Depending on how the competition for your attention is biased, whether by you or your neurons, you can have very different experiences of the same scene. All day long, you focus on what seems most important and suppress what doesn't.
